Early Life

Seris came from one of the most powerful and wealthiest families in the Republic. The Voss name meant a lot in politics and business, this gave Seris a lot of chances to excel and gain education from a young age. Seris was one of the few that didn't rely on her family's name, but she was just naturally good in politics, law, and government. She was one the type of person, if you needed intel on something she will get it for you no matter the cost.

From a young age, she studied the structure of the Republic but not as a passive observer, but as someone who wanted to know how to make systems better and keep them under control. Seris saw problems that others thought were stable. She saw stagnation where they saw tradition. She didn't want to take overpower; she wanted to make it better.

Rise within the Senate

In 977 RSY, Seris Voss became the Senator of Ashas Ree, marking the start of a career that would quickly shift the political landscape. Her presence in the Senate was immediate and impactful, earning her a reputation for being composed, deliberate, and strategically savvy. Her talents led to her role as Chairwomen of the Judiciary Oversight Committee, where she undertook her most significant work. Seris played a crucial role in revamping the Republic's Judicial Branch. She advocated for clarity, efficiency, and centralized authority, ensuring that laws were not only enforced but controlled. Her influence extended even further, as she contributed to revisions within the Republic’s constitutional framework. While many applauded her initiatives as necessary progress, others quietly noted the increasing rigidity of the system she helped design.

> “ Judicial independence is the Republic’s final safeguard.

Alliance with House Lysos

Seris's political career peaked when she became the Vice Speaker of the Senate, placing her among the most influential figures in the Republic. During this time, she forged a close bond with House Lysos, one of the Senate's most esteemed families. Her marriage to Jordan Lysos united the Voss and Lysos houses, strengthening her political influence even more. Among the Lysos family, Seris was particularly close to Conrad Lysos, the Speaker of the Senate. He wasn’t just a colleague—he was her mentor, her closest ally, and, in many ways, her moral compass. Their relationship thrived on mutual respect, trust, and a shared vision for the Republic’s potential.

Departure from the Senate

After years of dedicated service, Seris made the surprising choice to step away from the Senate. Having achieved what few could, she decided to leave the political arena, seeking peace and freedom beyond the burdens of governance. For the first time, she allowed herself to exist outside the system she had devoted her life to refining. She decided to spend time with her family, seeking peace and unity in the city of Carida. She left The Republic, and that day, the Republic she left didn't stay the same.

Loss of Faith

In the aftermath, Seris began to view the Republic differently. The system she had helped build and strengthen now appeared fragile, corrupt, and deeply flawed. The Republic that she once trusted in now crumbled into chaos. Seris no longer perceived a government worth saving, she saw a system that had decayed from within. The same building that she once worked within, blown to pieces, the place she spent most of her life just gone. Although she didn't know who or what did it, this will not stop her from finding out.

Recruitment

After many have seen Seris's brilliance, and her perspective changing, High Admiral Pax approached Seris with a task, a task to deliver a message that would change her life entirely. Admiral Pax did not want to recruit Seris as a solider, but as a strategist, spy and her former role a Senator. He wanted someone capable of shaping political systems with the same expertise that he applied on the battlefield. He recognized what Seris had become, not someone who is broken, but someone who is redirected into a better cause. He offered her a new purpose within the Confederacy of Independent Systems, where her understanding of the Republic’s inner workings could be used against it.

As Seris takes upon the role of Senator, she will attempt to aid the CIS from within. She will become a voice for their concerns and play a key role manipulating the ones that call themselves "Senators". Seris brought precision, experience, and a profound understanding on how governance works. After she saw the death of her dearest friend Conrad Lysos who was executed by Republic Intelligence made Seris trigger. She devoted herself to a single aim which was to destroy the Republic from within.

> “ The Senate’s legitimacy depends on transparency. Law must remain superior to executive ambition.
