

CO - 1138 "Bacara"

Overview

The storm never stopped on Kamino cloning facility. Lightning split the sky as another generation of clones emerged into existence. Identical faces, identical purpose, identical destiny. Among them was CO-1138, later known as Bacara.

From his first breath in the sterile halls of Tipoca City, Bacara was different—not in form, but in temperament. Kaminoan overseers noted subtle behavioral traits: heightened focus, reduced emotional variance, and an unusual tolerance for isolation and extreme environments. Where other clones bonded quickly, Bacara observed. Calculated. Waited.

His genetic template, derived from Jango Fett, was pushed further in Bacara’s case. The Kaminoans and Galactic Republic strategists intended him for one thing: survival in the harshest warzones imaginable.

Military Career

As the Clone Wars escalated, specialized units were formed for extreme theaters of war. Bacara was selected for one of the most elite and unforgiving: The 21st Nova Corps, feared Galactic Marines.

The Nova Corps was deployed to some of the Republic’s worst battlefronts—worlds where survival itself was a victory. Bacara led from the front. This unit was designed for:

- 1. Planetary sieges
- 2. Hazardous environments
- 3. Zero-visibility combat zones
- 4. Total war scenarios

Bacara quickly rose through the ranks due to his discipline and tactical clarity. His ability to maintain cohesion under catastrophic conditions made him indispensable.

Notable Engagements

Bacara is known for his major engagements on planets like Yerbana, Carida, and Rhen Varr. The 21st began their crusade on the fields of Yerbana, where they were tasked with riding the planet of pirates alone. Though they took major losses, they used their march forward and don't stop tactics to clear out thousands of pirates, and after a long push, they had exterminated all signs of enemy life on the planet.
