

CO-5597 "Jesse"

Overview

CO-5597 "Jesse" is another legendary figure with a heart on his sleeve and his allegiance to the Republic cog tattooed over his brow, he is the embodiment of a leader's skill. Long before he was a seasoned veteran, Jesse carved out a reputation at the Cadet Academy, where he served as a hard-nosed but respected instructor. It was during these formative years that he forged a lifelong bond with Rex, a friendship built on shared grit and a mutual understanding of what it truly means to lead brothers into the fire.

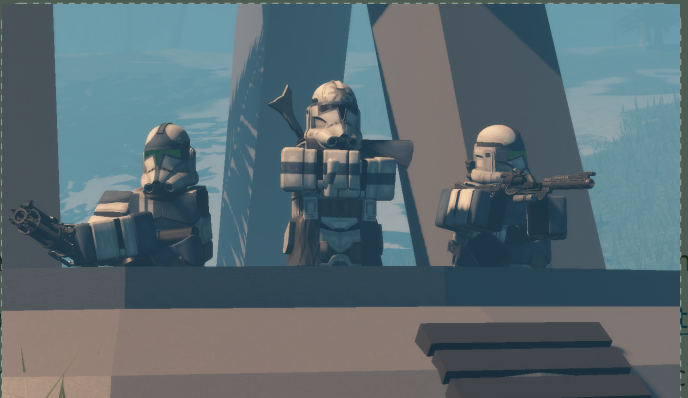

A veteran of many battles, Jesse currently helps lead the 501st on their operations in Christophsis.

Military Career

While he started as an instructor, when the Clone Wars ignited, Jesse was first to volunteer for a frontline role. Due to his natural command presence and experience instructing clones, he was placed in the 501st as a Captain in its elite Torrent Company.

Jesse distinguished himself during the battles in Carida. From helping defend a Venator alongside the 501st in the intense space battle to leading his company to secure key objectives on the ground, he was vital in the liberation of the planet. From there, like the rest of the 501st, Jesse was sent to Alderaan to rescue the 212th trapped on the planet and push back the Separatist invasion. However, Jesse could never have predicted how brutal the Alderaan campaign would turn out. Facing orbital strikes after orbital strikes, watching his men face constant ambushes by Droid Forces, Jesse steeled himself and promised both vengeance on the Droids and to do all he could to protect his brothers and his Republic.

After their costly success on Alderaan, Jesse was moved to Corellia where he would help lead the campaign during Rex's absence on a classified mission. His ability to plan ahead, honed by the campaigns he had already faced, allowed him to plan successfully to counter the droid attacks and set up bases to protect his men from the orbital strikes that devastated them on Alderaan. After successfully clearing a region on Alderaan, Jesse, alongside the rest of the 501st, was told that they would be heading to Christophsis, the Republic's most intense campaign due to the losses taken by

Cost of War

While the loss of every brother hits Jesse hard, the deaths of some brothers affected him more than anything else. Gone are his most cherished brothers, but not the lessons they taught him. Every chance he gets, he teaches the younger generation of Clones about the legacies and accomplishments of the fallen.

Hardcase during the Alderaan Campaign.

Even after the bombardment, Jesse kept Hardcase's "never-say-die" attitude. He encouraged his heavy gunners to be bold and creative, often telling stories of the Warrant Officer who could take down a Spider Droid with a laugh. Jesse became the Captain who valued courage over caution.

Fives, during the Alderaan Campaign.

Fives taught Jesse that a Captain is only as good as his men's trust. After the ambush, Jesse vowed never to be a "desk commander." He led from the front, just like Fives did, ensuring that the First Lieutenant's tactical creativity lived on in every Torrent Company flanking maneuver.

Tup during the Christophsis Campaign.

Tup was the one who checked on the shinies. After Tup fell, Jesse took that role on himself. He became the Captain who knew every trooper's name and backstory. He realized that leadership is about people, not just missions.

Dogma, during the Christophsis Campaign.

Dogma showed Jesse the importance of loyalty to the Republic. Even though Dogma was young and strict, his dedication was unmatched. Jesse honored him by maintaining a high standard of excellence in Torrent, making sure they were the sharpest unit in the 501st.
