ST-4068 "Ravor" is a ST-series Super Tactical Droid commissioned by the Confederacy of Independent Systems to operate as an Admiral in the Separatist Military. Created to counteract the inflexible and predictable deficiencies of the T-series model, ST-series Super Tactical Droids were programmed with higher strategical processing and intelligence, while also equipped with better tactical analysis and predicting a response to organic commanders.

The personality of ST-4068 "Ravor" developed through his extensive time around other droids, basing his entire personality on his core programming and refined through his years of service. Due to his nurture conditions, Ravor had been known to prioritize his own function and the preservation of his forces, causing him to rarely commit himself to the frontlines and instead focus on strategy and tactics. While others mistake his lack of action for cowardice, Ravor instead favors roundabout tactics that delivers decisive results while minimalizing damage to his fleets. Ravor's tactical awareness has allowed him to hold command over larger fleets while still maintaining complex formations and his reliability in combat.

Abilities

As an ST-series Super Tactical Droid, ST-4068 "Ravor" possesses the advanced abilities that all other units of his model possess. Super Tactical Droids were created for the Confederacy of Independent Systems to adress the shortcomings of the T-series Tactical Droids. As such, they are highly adaptable, durable, and hold far more advanced processing power then their T-series counterpart. Additionally, all ST-series Super Tactical Droids are built with three photoreceptors, providing a wider optical range across the light spectrum.
