

Ner Y. Uchiha - DEAD

Birth

In the shadowed outskirts of the Mist, a child was born to the remnants of the Yuki clans. Her parents fled to Sunagakure after Kirigakure's fall. She grew up in a small village.

Early Age

From a young age, Ner's eyes reflected a determination that set her apart. She harbored dreams of restoring Kirigakure to its former glory—a land where the Mist would once again be a proud symbol of power and strength. Her ambition was not merely to rebuild its physical attributes but to reclaim its lost culture and heritage. This was her goal, or so she said.

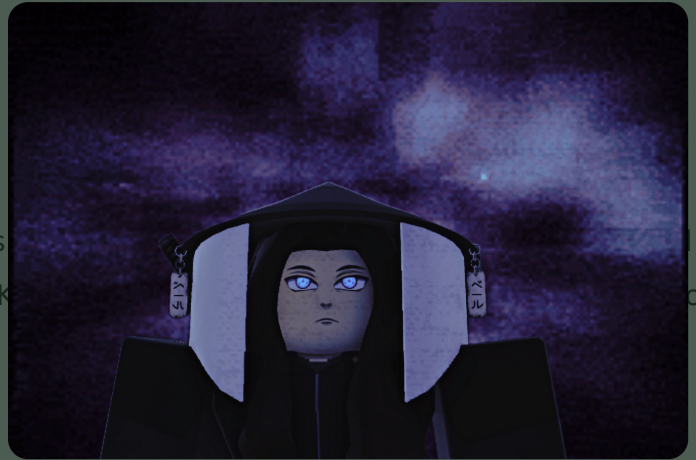

Creation of The Fragments

As she matured, Ner's leadership qualities blossomed. She formed a group known as the Fragments of the Mist, a collective dedicated to the revival of Kirigakure. The Fragments were made up of former Mist high-ranking officials, seasoned Chūnin, and skilled Jōnin. Really they were a group of looked-down upon misfits joined her. They called themselves The Fragments of Mist. They thought their influence extended far beyond the borders of the Mist, drawing support from Shinobi across the lands who believed in Ner's vision, but it had far less pull than desired.

Awakening

Ner's unique lineage bore fruit in unexpected ways. The bloodlines of the Yuki and Uchiha clans coursed through her veins. This caused her to have an odd mutation compared to other Uchiha. This mutation altered her Sharingan's color to a shade of blue.

Morals & Beliefs

Personal Details

NAME	Ner Y. Uchiha
BORN	1 VE
AGE	16
KILLS	3
STATUS	Dead
VILLAGE	Sunagakure

Despite her power, Ner's heart was steadfast in her beliefs. She stood against the discrimination that plagued the Shinobi world, believing that no Shinobi should suffer because of their clan lineage. Her past, marked by prejudice both in the Mist and in the Sand, fueled her resolve to weave a new era for all Shinobi. As Ner worked tirelessly towards her goal, she drew the ire of the world's ruling powers. She thought figures like Ikari Uchiha and Rui, entrenched in their totalitarian systems, saw her as a threat to their control. They feared the hope she embodied, the power of light and optimism she wielded in a world seeking to subjugate the masses. "Old men are the cause of young men dying for their mistakes," Ner often reflected, her azure eyes burning with resolve. Ikari had trampled upon the Shinobi world long enough, and Ner was determined to put an end to the cycle of oppression. In reality, she was a big fish in a small pond moving into a big ocean. Though her journey was impressive, she wouldn't amount to much.

Leadership & Vision

In the heart of the Sand Village, as the sun set over the dunes, Ner walked alongside the Sunagakure walls. She was not just a leader; she was a beacon of hope, a symbol of rebellion against the darkness of the old ways, or so she thought. The Fragments of the Mist rallied around her, ready to restore the honor and strength of Kirigakure and, ultimately, the entire Shinobi world. That's what they imagined, anyway.

Her journey was quite easy due to fortunate circumstances. With every step, she thought she was moving closer to a future which she and many other envisioned— where no Shinobi would be judged by their lineage, where the Mist would rise from its ashes, and where the song of the Mist shall guide them all out of the darkness and into the light; however, she would eventually become a relic of the already established Blood Mist Village. She did not rise to become Mizukage or accomplish her "goals". Simply another upstart who never amounted to their lofty ambitions.

Disappearance

Nothing concrete is known about her disappearance. As if she was taken by a spectral wind. Soon after, she was mostly forgotten by the world; her influence reduced to nothing.
