Early Life

The 49th Shogun Sasaki Kurogane was a known S[illegible] Shogunate. Born in year 10 BVE, he lived during t[illegible] about through horrors of love one's and relatives [illegible] pushed Sasaki to join the ranks of the samurai. His idol was Valentine Tetsu Kurogane and being the son of Musashi Kurogane only to find out that he had some type of family relations to them once those days pass by, Sasaki was willing to devote himself to learn every way of the sword. Sasaki wanted nothing but to honor his family's legacy and to become a skilled samurai in his own right. He dedicated himself wholeheartedly to mastering the ways of the sword, inspired by his idol Valentine Tetsu Kurogane and motivated by the tragic losses his family suffered during the Kenrai war. His determination led him to seek out every opportunity to refine his skills and uphold the values of bushido, the samurai code of honor.

Rise to Shogun

*Sasaki Decided to go through every rank he could achieve to be able to become the Senchou only later to find on his journey that his shogun was currupted by the man that goe's by the name kagetsu. Kagetsu chose to give Musashi more power to slowly take over his body and control him but in the back of Sasaki mind all he wanted was the land to flourish again to be at its peak and to never fall to Kenrai filth. Sasaki was wounded and kidnaped during a fight with the leader of kenrai only to be told to kill Musashi his father.... But as soon as those words were removed from the lips of the kenrai filth he was filled with rage ready to fight back only for the leader to disappear into thin air. Driven by his deep-rooted desire to see the land prosper and to prevent it from falling into the hands of corrupt influences like Kagetsu, Sasaki Kurogane embarked on a journey through every rank he could attain. His goal was to reach the position of Senchou, a leadership role that would allow him to wield significant influence and ensure the welfare of the land he loved. Along the way, he confronted the harsh reality that his shogun had been corrupted by Kagetsu, who sought to manipulate and control even the powerful Musashi Kurogane.

Despite these challenges and the looming threat of Kagetsu's influence, Sasaki remained steadfast in his commitment. His loyalty to the ideals of bushido and his determination to protect his homeland fueled his resolve. He knew that only by attaining the Senchou position could he have the authority and influence necessary to counteract the corruption and ensure that the land would flourish once more, free from the shadow of the Kenrai war's devastation. Throughout his journey,

Sasaki faced numerous trials, each testing his skills as a swordsman and his resolve as a leader. Yet, his vision of a thriving and secure land drove him forward, guiding his actions and decisions. His ultimate goal was not just personal advancement but the restoration of honor and prosperity to a land scarred by conflict and betrayal.*

Creation of Dual Sword Style

After the devastating loss of his leg in his failed attempt to stop Musashi and Kagetsu, Sasaki Kurogane faced a pivotal moment of reckoning. Determined to continue his fight despite his physical disability, Sasaki embarked on a journey of introspection and adaptation. It was during this time that he conceived the idea of creating a new sword-fighting style that would compensate for his lost limb and leverage his strengths.

Drawing upon his deep knowledge of traditional samurai swordsmanship and inspired by the teachings of his idol, Valentine Tetsu Kurogane, Sasaki began to develop what would come to be known as the Dual Sword Style. This innovative approach emphasized the use of two swords simultaneously—one in each hand—allowing for a dynamic and versatile combat technique.

The Dual Sword Style was not merely a practical adaptation to his physical condition; it was a testament to Sasaki's resilience and creativity in the face of adversity. By wielding two swords with precision and agility, he could compensate for the loss of his leg and maintain a formidable offense against adversaries. Each blade in his hands became an extension of his will and determination to protect the mainland and uphold the honor of his family.

Through rigorous training and refinement of his new fighting style, Sasaki honed his skills to even greater heights. The Dual Sword Style not only became a symbol of his personal growth and adaptation but also a potent weapon in his ongoing battle against the forces of corruption and tyranny.

Ultimately, the creation of the Dual Sword Style represented Sasaki Kurogane's unwavering commitment to his ideals and his relentless pursuit of justice and redemption. It embodied the fusion of tradition and innovation, reflecting his journey from loss and despair to renewed strength and resilience in the face of adversity.

Kagetsu and Musashi

As months go by Sasaki decided to help mainland after finding out that musashi was fully control by kagetsu but as he continued to ravage the lands Sasaki had one goal... To end his father once and for all, but was fell short to stop Musashi & kagetsu only to lose his leg in the process...
