Society and Culture

Ilum does not possess a traditional society. There are no cities, governments, or civilian populations. Instead, the planet is visited almost exclusively by members of the Jedi Order.

For generations, Jedi younglings have traveled to Ilum as part of their training, undertaking a pilgrimage to locate and bond with their kyber crystal. This journey is deeply personal, often requiring patience, reflection, and a strong connection to the Force.

The environment itself plays a role in this process. The cold, isolation, and silence of Ilum create conditions that strip away distraction, forcing those who walk its surface to confront themselves as much as the world around them.

Government

Ilum exists under the informal custodianship of the Jedi Order. There is no structured government, no political system, and no permanent administrative presence.

Control over the planet is maintained through restriction rather than enforcement. Access is limited, and activity is minimal, preserving both the natural environment and the integrity of its kyber crystal formations.

In practice, Ilum functions as a protected world, where its value is understood not in terms of control or development, but in preservation.
