They enter and complete the trials slowly but surely, until the trial itself shows a disturbance in its natural energy..., As shinobi try to understand what's wrong, the puppet Alive reveals themselves, questioning the shinobi about life and death once more. The shinobi learn the Oribe Trial was being drained of its ambient chakra to fuel a plan of the Shirogane Revolution. The floor collapses beneath them as they try to speak to the puppet, and another fight breaks out. Tracking the Houki Elder

Word of the puppet and the Shirogane reach the ears of other parties, and with help from the Kazesuna Elder and Yome Caretaker, the shinobi find a trail leading to the Houki Elders location. They find him stopped at a small town deep within the desert, a small flying island above them. The shinobi greet the Elder, who appears friendly and kind to them, inviting them into his personal shipping facility and telling them stories of the old Land of Wind. He confirms the history of the Shirogane within the Land of Wind, wiped out by the major clans after they tried using human corpses to make truly dangerous weapons. He excuses himself for a moment and steps out, only for banging knocks on the door to be heard moments later. The shinobi are confronted by the townspeople for being terrorists, a claim made by the Houki Elder as he escapes the proceeding fight. The shinobi leave the town mostly just injured, but some question the intentions of the Houki Elder as he escapes,

Alives Evolution

After more raids from the Shirogane Revolution and many meetings with Alive to try and help them. Shinobi uncover the truth about the puppet. Once the daughter of the Houki Elder, Nivale was killed by poison as Aaeron Houki, the Houki Elder cut all ties with his clan and family after working with the Silversand. He aided the Silversand in killing the Oribe Clan Head, and an attempt on the Yome and Kazesuna Elders lives were made but failed. As the Great Scorpion War came to an end, the Houki Elder made sure his clan was secure, then fled the land and cut all ties to prevent the Silversand from blackmailing him or his clan.

I will kill that puppet, it is a weapon... not my daughter."

Alives New Form

The shinobi are able to track the location of Nivale back to a hidden base within the town she was first found in. The shinobi enter to find Nivale barely alive and torn of most of her parts. Aaeron Houki, Tyrant of the Winds

The shinobi receive reports of Aaeron Houkis location within the desert, waiting for the Shinobis arrival. The shinobi arrive with their newfound ally, the puppet Nivale, and stand face-to-face with the Houki Elder and his minions. The Elder reveals his plans, Erase the Shirogane clan out of history, kill the Kazesuna Elder which he succeeded in, and Kill Nivale, the last tie to this land he wishes to remove from himself. The shinobi face off against the prime strength Elder as he summons tornados and manipulates the wind to lift him and the sandstone up to annihilate the shinobi and his daughter. The shinobi defeat his minions, and fight back against the oppressive and malevolent winds to reach the Elder at his peak power. The shinobi weaken him down but despite their efforts, the man chosen by the winds does not falter. He demands that Nivale submit to him and die.

The Puppet Nivale makes a decision. As a puppet reborn from the daughter of the man before them, she thanks the shinobi for their help. She thanks them for helping her understand her new form, emotions like hope, fear, greed, bloodlust.

She thanks the shinobi, for helping her truly feel Alive.

As the shinobi step back, she embraced her father, activating the self-destructive core the shinobi told her not to implant. In her last moments, she achieved her goal, and took down the Tyrant of the Winds with the help of Sunagakure.
